A NEW THEORY OF VALUE:
The Canadian Economics of Harold Adams Innis
ROBIN NEILL
This analysis of the thought of H. A. Innis is a plea for a rational approach to the economic problems of Canada. The theories of Innis, who was an intermediary between the Chicago School and the social ecology of McLuhan, are the basis of much of the recent economic nationalism here and they offer an alternate outlook to the barren U.S. professionalism of the last two decades. This is a concise and intellectual account of a man who thought that his living on the periphery (Canada) gave him a clear view of what was happening in Europe and the U.S. whose views of economics gives him increasing relevance, and whose thought has an important message for economists, historians, social theorists, and those concerned with Canadian identity.

NATIONALISM, COMMUNISM AND CANADIAN LABOUR:
The CIO, the Communist Party and the Canadian Congress of Labour, 1935-56
IRVING M. ABELLA
The story of the bitter, bloody, but successful struggle to create an industrial union movement in Canada as well as the equally fierce but successful battle to build a national movement in Canada.
'Irving Abella has produced a work which is not overshadowed by any other in Canadian labour history, and his publisher's comment that the book "should stand as the definitive work on the growth of industrial and international unionism in Canada," is not made undeservedly. (His) book comes as a warmly welcomed scholarly work.' Gary O'Brien Pro Tem
